Keeping Christmas Poinsettias All Year Long

The Christmas decorations are put away, but what about your poinsettias? You can care for them after the holidays as you would other houseplants: Poinsettias originate in warm climates, so they like a comfortable temperature between 55F and 71F. Keep them away from cold, drafty windows and heated air vents. Provide bright but indirect natural light and let the soil dry out between waterings. The plant can rebloom later with a little extra effort. Try this care schedule tied to the seasons:

January to Spring: The color petals—which are actually leaves called bracts—will eventually fade and fall off. It's time to fertilize and prune back the plant.

Midsummer: If the plant has received adequate water and indirect sunlight, new shoots should develop and the plant should grow green all summer long. Then it's time to repot the plant.

Fall: Once the days shorten, allow the plant to have 12 hours of darkness daily, placing it in a closet or basement if needed. By November the plant should develop color and you'll be able to enjoy the poinsettia once again through a new Christmas holiday season.
